With the political unrest and world Economy, Corporate employees are facing new threats.

Almost every day our agency receives reports of injuries to travelers and employees traveling overseas.

Mexico's problems far exceed what the news is reporting. Often because of political positions, there is little reporting of the violence there.

There have been well over 100 Americans killed in the border regions. Corruption is Rampant amongst law enforcement in the Area.

Along with this are coming new lawsuits against companies for failure to provide training to staff, or in some instances failing to fully inform employees of the danger.

But this is becoming a problem in many countries. Our agency has been contacted by companies that have offices in China, Mexico, Nigers, and many other countries.

Part of the problem is many companies actually have either no security experts or their staff is not adequately qualified to deal with these new risks.

Ideas.

Have you set up security protocols for even the most basic of problems?

Do you have contact with a security expert that you trust?

Do you have a resource to contact when you have questions?

Spy gear is it being used to track your employees.

Victims in Mexico speak out.

Gang members in Mexico now using covert skills on Victims

More and More reports of victims of gang members in Mexico are showing that gang members have gained specialized training in covert skills and are using them.

Victims of car jacking's and extortion are reporting that they receive calls from gang members. The gang members are able to tell the victims a complete time line as to their whereabouts, travel time, where they eat and where they live.

This indicates a pattern of intelligence gathering skills, most likely gained from trained law enforcement officers whom have been enlisted by the cartel.

Data gathered on American victims clearly show that very few of the Americans killed or hurt had been given training in personal security techniques.

This leaves victims with little or no resources to protect themselves, very few employees know where to take the specialized personal security training.

Often corporate personnel have little knowledge of providers handling specialized training. But now the world has changed evidence shows that violence will continue to escalate around the world.

In Niger it was estimated that every 10 days a foreign employee was being kidnapped.

Does martial arts' training help?

There are numerous providers of martial arts training programs in the U.S. Evidence shows that these programs by themselves or as initial training programs are a bad idea.

First most of these programs last 1 to 3 days and the providers often have few if any real credentials. Secondly while martial arts is great for health. Many styles of martial arts are not for real world situations encountered in let's say a carjacking.

Next muscle memory is very important in martial arts training, which these short programs cannot obtain.

It is impractical to expect untrained individuals to respond in such a way as to be able under emergency situations, to protect themselves.

The first rule of a professional trainer is to keep the employee out of these situations. Using force often escalates the chance of being injured.

While martial arts training never hurts.

It should never be used in a way to encourage personnel to use it before attempting nonviolent Response techniques.

Alphacorps Not only provides training; we will work with smaller corporations in setting up their security protocols

Security training by ex-military not meeting standards.

Training programs used for the government are not effective for corporate personnel. A new type of proprietary training has become available by companies specializing in corporate security design.

It has been well known that part of the problem with training is the quality of the design and experience of the trainer. Often real world experience as a military trainer does not translate to effective programs for the corporate world.

Now Alphacorps has become the only providers of proprietary training for corporate security. Alpha corps provides training for American companies.

Alphacorps is now working on new Security training.

Majority of victims had no training in personal security.

While there have been over 100 Americans, killed, on the border area between Mexico and Texas.

Evidence shows that few if any had ever taken a Personal security or safety training course.

Security expert Master Hughes of Alphacorps stated” often 99 percent of crimes, can be prevented when individuals take security training and the individuals practice security concepts daily.

Many deaths and injuries can be prevented; personal safety even applies when you live in the U.S

There are certainly cities in the U.S that can be as dangerous as Mexico. “Many people can avoid dangerous situations by just being exposed to security training, which helps them understand how many crimes are committed.

Gun scandal creeps closer to the White House

Times reporter Richard Serrano in Washington reports today that at least three officials in the White House were aware of the gun-tracking program that saw hundreds of weapons "walked" into and lost in Mexico, fueling drug-related violence by the ATF.

The officials who received emails about Operation Fast and Furious were Kevin M. O'Reilly, Dan Restrepo and Greg Gatjanis, all national security officials in the Obama administration.

The shocking fact is if a regular citizen were to have allowed guns to go to Mexico he would be prosecuted, but so far only a few of the officials involved have just been reassigned.

Gangsters demand 50 percent of school teachers income.

Hundreds of teachers in fear in the pacific beach area of Acapulco stayed off the job because of threat by gangsters demanding 50 percent of their income. Threats to school teacher's, violence around schools in Monterrey and parents getting shot in Ciudad Juarez. Yet the news in the U.S strangely overlooks reporting the violence. So far violence has primarily targeted Mexican Nationals. Most likely that will soon change. Americans working in Mexico are sure to start becoming victims of kidnapping and ransom requests.

The Government is lying about violence on border including violence on Texas soil. Recently hunters reported being shot at and robbed by Mexican gunmen who crossed the river into the United States.

The Border Patrol has identified those gunmen as Mexican Federal Police Agents, but they said the shooting and robbery were not part of their initial investigation.

"This is a crisis situation on the border and unless a citizen seems to run into it as the hunters did, the government is not really going to tell you about it," Tom Fitton the President of Judicial Watch said.

Texas department of safety Director Steven Mcgraw appearing before a congressional panel stated that the reported statistics on violence on the border don't tell the whole story. He stated that organized crime has proliferated from Brownsville to El Paso. The question is has the government ordered a cover-up and encouraged false statistics. Incursions are happening at an alarming rate.
